

LIBERAL/LIBERAL DEMOCRAT CANDIDATES in the WEST MIDLAND REGION 1945-2019

CONSTITUENCIES within the COUNTIES of HEREFORDSHIRE, SHROPSHIRE, STAFFORDSHIRE, WARWICKSHIRE and WORCESTERSHIRE

INCLUDING SDP CANDIDATES in the GENERAL ELECTIONS of 1983 and 1987

PREFACE

As a party member since 1959, based in the West Midlands and a parliamentary candidate and member of the WMLF/WMRP Executive for much of that time, I have been in the privileged position of having met on many occasions, known well and/or worked closely with a significant number of the individuals whose names appear in the Index which follows. Whenever my memory has failed me, I have drawn on the recollections of others or sought information from extant records. Seven decades have passed since the General Election of 1945 and there are few people now living with personal recollections of candidates who fought so long ago. I have drawn heavily upon recollections of conversations with older Liberal personalities in the West Midland Region who I knew in my early days with the party. I was conscious when I began work, twenty years ago, that much of this information would be lost forever were it not committed promptly to print.

The Liberal challenge was weak in the West Midland Region over the period 1945 to 1959 in common with most regions of Britain. The number of constituencies fought fluctuated wildly; 1945, 21; 1950, 31; 1951, 3; 1955, 4. The number of parliamentary constituencies in the region averaged just short of 60, a large proportion urban in character. Over 1951-55 only one Birmingham constituency was fought, virtually none in the adjoining Black Country conurbation. There was an encouraging increase in the number fought in 1959, 1964 and 1966. There were few by-elections locally over the immediate post-war decade, the Liberals always standing aside until Frank Owen fought Hereford in 1956. The record at by-elections improved dramatically from 1960 but occasional by-elections in the region went unfought until the 1970s. The front narrowed again in the General Election of 1970.

After a record showing in February 1974, the party fought every constituency in the region for the first time at the General Election in the following October. The front narrowed in 1979 when an electoral set back was anticipated after the Thorpe affair and the controversial Lib-Lab agreement of 1977-78. In 1983 and 1987 the Liberal Party and the SDP fought all the constituencies on a shared basis. Since the merger of 1988, the Liberal Democrats have contested virtually every constituency in the West Midland Region at by-elections and at the General Elections of 1992-2015. Exceptions were at West Bromwich West in 1997, where, by convention, the main parties did not nominate a candidate to oppose the Speaker and at Wyre Forest in 2001 and 2005, where the Liberal Democrats declined to oppose the Independent, Richard Taylor, who represented that constituency 2001-10 under the designation Health Concern, closely associating himself with the Liberal Democrat Parliamentary party and many of its policies in the Commons.

By prior agreement with the Green Party at the General Election of 2019, the Liberal Democrats did not nominate a candidate for the Cannock Chase constituency.

THE MARTELL PLAN

The Martell Plan, mentioned in passing throughout the regional directories was the electoral strategy adopted by the Liberal Party for the General Election of 1950. It was first named after Edward Martell qv (Greater London), a party 'grandee' of the immediate post-war years who advocated the nomination of over 150 additional candidates in constituencies which had little or no Liberal organization nor history of Liberal activity in recent years. Most were adopted less than two months before nomination day, many at the eleventh hour, Martell's objective being to increase the Liberal challenge to a level at which the party would be enabled to form a government, presuming enough MPs were elected.

Martell and his supporters, among them many younger party members including Jeremy Thorpe, Isaac Hyam qqv, believed that a steadily growing number of adoptions being announced in the media would create a momentum of its own in the minds of the electorate. The majority of the constituencies involved were in urban areas of Greater London, the North West, South East, Scotland and the West Midland Regions, though other regions were involved to lesser degree. Quixotically, a considerable number of largely rural constituencies went uncontested where a Liberal candidate might have fared reasonably well, judging upon results obtained at the 1945 General Election. The final national tally of candidates, a fair proportion of them of dubious Liberal pedigree, was over 450. The party lost over 300 deposits, though without contemporary records of Liberal associations, or regional parties, covering the period, it is now impossible to differentiate technically between a 'Martell Plan Candidate' and a candidate, albeit in an unpromising constituency, adopted following more formal procedures, well in advance of nomination day. An enormous percentage of the Martell Plan candidates were among those to lose their deposits of £150, then set at 12 1/2% of votes cast. Fortunately provision had been made for some measure of insurance cover with Lloyds in the City of London against this contingency.

The goal of fighting every mainland constituency in the UK was finally achieved 25 years later under the leadership of Jeremy Thorpe at the General Election of October 1974. The broad front was reduced, marginally, at the following election of 1979. In both 1983 and 1987 the Liberals and their allies, the SDP, each contested roughly 50% of the UK parliamentary constituencies, avoiding contests against each other save in a handful of cases. Since 1992 the Liberal Democrats have contested every constituency in mainland UK, save for that held by The Speaker and a handful of other instances, at every successive general election. In recent times party nominees who are nominated at the last minute in unpromising constituencies, simply to show the flag, have come to be termed 'paper candidates.' Virtually every candidate at recent general elections, however, has been approved by the party's parliamentary candidates' committee and adopted according to formal procedure. By prior agreement with the Green Party, the Liberal Democrats decided not to contest the Cannock Chase constituency at the General Election of 2019.

The scale of defeat for the Liberal Party in the 1950 General Election, in which nine Liberal MPs were elected, was eclipsed by the debacle of 2015 when only eight of the previously held 57 constituencies returned a Liberal Democrat MP. No less than 340 of 631 deposits were forfeited, £170,000, at the current rate of £500, with the threshold at 5% of votes cast. No deposits had been lost by the party at the General Election of 2010. The Liberal Democrats lost 375 deposits totaling £187,500 at the General Election of 2017, once again contesting virtually every constituency in England, Scotland and Wales. In the General Election of 2019 with several local constituencies being left unfought, by agreement with Green Party and the Welsh Nationalists, the Liberal Democrats lost 136 deposits amounting to £68,000.

DAY, Robin (later Sir Robin) OBE, b Hampstead, London 1923, ed Bembridge s, Isle of Wight, Oxford U; Pres of Union; war service; worked in Washington for British Information Service; called to Bar 1952 though apparently never practised; BBC TV 1952-55, joining ITV News 1956; came to fore after interviewing President Nasser of Egypt in Cairo in 1957 shortly after Suez episode; after his political interlude, he rejoined BBC TV; at various times presenter of Panorama, Question Time, General Election Results and Budget Specials etc on TV, BBC Radio World At One etc; claimed that he was the first to call for the televising of parliamentary proceedings in a Hansard Society paper in 1963; knighted 1981; published two autobiographies Day By Day 1975, Grand Inquisitor 1989, the latter being of interest for chapters on the parliamentary campaign at Hereford in 1959 and his dealings with local Liberal personalities, for many of whom he had only contempt, including the ageing Liberal stalwart, Alderman Farr qv.

A distinguished, influential, political broadcaster, Day introduced the 'hard line', an abrasive, often belligerent dimension to the techniques of interviewing of political figures. He made the most of his unprepossessing appearance by sporting heavy rimmed spectacles and an enormous bow tie. After his unsuccessful attempt to enter Commons at Hereford, where he failed totally to adapt his undoubted talents either to the platform or doorstep, he was at pains to expunge his association with the Liberals from the memory and distance himself from the party. His commitment to Liberalism had in any case never been more than tenuous. In an interview of his old leader, Jo Grimond, in an election broadcast of 1966, he was rude to the point of offensiveness as if he were seizing the opportunity to make a final public vindication of himself for past transgressions.

Day was said to have been of a cantankerous personality, difficult to work with, reportedly with few, intimate friends, though he had a myriad of superficial acquaintances. He lacked a genuine sense of humour and always wore a stony expression. There were allegations that he often displayed an offensive, chauvinist attitude towards women colleagues. The exaggerated professional reputation he enjoyed in life has justly received posthumous re-evaluation. He fell short of being Britain's equivalent of Ed Murrow by a considerable margin; d 2000; Hereford 1959.

Gifted with a powerful voice, a formidable, emotional, if at times prolix public speaker, he was noted for his hyperbole and malapropisms, mispronunciations eg 'omes before hoffices,' 'amalgamated,' misuse of vocabulary eg 'redundant' constituencies without any Liberal organisation' He had a great flair for publicity and was seldom free from media attention. He could not be ignored even by fiercely hostile Birmingham press. He was detested by both Labour and Conservative civic leaders for daring to challenge their 'duopoly' while his high-handed behaviour and boundless personal ambition often aroused strong opposition from within his own camp. He was hopelessly at odds on many issues with younger colleagues of Liberal group towards the end of his career Paul Tilsley, Dennis Minnis, Graham Gopsill qqv. He was a sincere and tireless champion of the many causes he embraced; the homeless, small businessmen, victims of villainous landlords, self-build housing groups, council tenants, Inner City problems, OAPs, youth clubs, National Health workers. Claiming to be non-political until his late 30s, he went on to contest numerous local elections for Birmingham City council finally being elected for Newtown Ward in 1962, the first Liberal in the chamber for 30 years serving until his death, latterly as an alderman. It was four years before a colleague, Ken Hardeman qv, was elected to join him. He was effectively leader of a Liberal group only from 1966-72.

His electioneering methods became known as 'community politics' and were widely adopted elsewhere, with outstanding success in Liverpool. They were also strongly favoured by the YL leaders who sponsored a successful Assembly resolution calling for the party to adopt 'community politics' as a campaign strategy. He also enjoyed considerable rapport with the YLs for his anti-party establishment views. In Birmingham the Lawler appeal generally fell upon deaf ears outside the Inner City, his approach proving unsuited to Conservative-inclined wards. It was not until after his death that younger Liberal candidates began to win seats on the edge of the city such as Sheldon, Yardley and Acocks Green.

All these strands, Lawlerism, community politics, Inner City problems, the support of the YLs – fused admirably at Ladywood to achieve his by-election victory in the summer of 1969. Already a sick man when elected as the first Liberal MP in Birmingham since 1880s, he became a vociferous advocate of all his chosen causes in the Commons being appointed party spokesman on Housing and the Home Office. His spirited attacks on the Labour government's record on housing brought upon him the hatred of their front bench and he was regularly shouted down by back benchers. But he proved an effective performer. In the disaster which befell the party at the General Election of 1970, he lost his seat after serving his troubled constituency for just 364 days. At the time of his death through lung cancer, after a long illness, bravely borne, he had already been adopted as PPC for the revised Birmingham, Small Heath constituency.

Lawler was one of the first figures in local government to voice opposition to the indiscriminate and wholesale redevelopment of inner-city areas, which he termed 'municipal fascism.' He welcomed the end of slums and sub-standard dwellings in Birmingham, many of which were over a century old. What he demanded was more thought, public consultation and imaginative planning with an increased emphasis on refurbishment of properties, small industrial premises, public buildings and expanded inner city facilities. He believed that in their haste to push through their plans, local authorities were destroying established communities and patterns of life and work. Birmingham's industrial might and great wealth had been founded in the C19th by entrepreneurs who had set up their businesses in central Birmingham. Many hundreds of these, involved in precision engineering and metals, still employed thousands of workers, many of them middle-aged, who lived often conveniently close to the workplace. All these factors had been overlooked. Many of these small businesses had simply closed, others after much disruption, had been re-located on industrial estates on the city boundaries. Many highly skilled workers, technicians and craftsmen, had lost their jobs or were obliged to become commuters. Lawler believed that the very existence of Birmingham as Britain's premier industrial city was at stake.

He deplored the building of high-rise tower blocks on bleak, impersonal estates, drawing attention to the consequences of the break-down of communities, particularly when thousands of uprooted families were re-settled on giant estates, such as Castle Vale, Erdington which was to become a by word for social engineering disasters of this kind. Birmingham's housing shortage could never have been solved at a stroke in this way, particularly when the policy created unforeseen social problems. He feared tensions arising among a new generation of rootless youth, no longer subject to the benign influence of a network of close relatives, life-long friends and neighbours. His doubts were dismissed by his opponents as being those of 'an alarmist reactionary, standing in the way of progress,' 'nostalgic day-dreaming' etc though he did attract the attention of the Bishop of Birmingham, some local religious groups and more perceptive sociologists. Sadly, nearly all his worst fears were realized.

Lawler championed from his election to the City Council the introduction of Organisation & Methods surveys, then a radical departure, into council departments. These he advised should be undertaken by outside firms, rather than by internal procedure. He was prompted by possibilities of savings being made and raising standards of efficiency. The suggestion was summarily rejected by the Labour-controlled Council, who not without cause, believed that adverse reports would call into question the efficiency of their administration. The Conservative opposition concurred, claiming the possible savings would not cover the fees payable to O & M firms. Leaders of the enormous staff of local government officers, fearing redundancies, also fiercely opposed the idea. It is likely that Lawler even at this stage suspected corruption in some council departments, particularly those concerned with the redevelopment of the city, many of the contracts awarded involving millions of pounds.

Eventually the Council engaged an O & M firm to undertake a survey in probably the least typical of all council departments, that of the Town Clerk. The final report suggested savings, if the recommendations were implemented, of hundreds of thousands of pounds. As for his suspicions of corruption, the city was stunned some years later when, after a sensational trial, the City Architect and leading officials of a major local building firm were jailed. In some areas of the country where urban redevelopment was taking place on a similar scale to Birmingham, for example the North East, legal proceedings led to the imprisonment of civic leaders among them T. Dan Smith. Lawler would have believed a number of Birmingham council personalities deserved a similar fate.

Lawler was an early advocate of a 20 m.p.h speed limit in side-streets and pedestrianisation of the City Centre, calling for the exclusion of private vehicles from within the Inner Ring Road. Though derided at the time some of these measures were introduced some years later, though in a piece meal fashion. He would have welcomed the imaginative redevelopment of the canal basins at Gas Street, the attractive focus of Birmingham's dining, entertainment and conference facilities. He would have fully approved of putting derelict industrial sites back into use, particularly those which had been neglected by the council for decades. The city's canal network figured in another of Lawler's many ideas which were years ahead of their time – reclamation and recycling. 'Birmingham could live off its own rubbish!' he once informed an incredulous council, where he was again mocked and jeered. Alderman Frank Griffin, the Conservative leader who harboured an unconcealed contempt for Lawler and Liberals in general, commented, 'You can scarcely trust the average Brummie to put rubbish in his own dustbin, let alone carry it to the end of the street!' The Birmingham newspapers were equally dismissive, devoting editorials to demolishing the latest Liberal 'crazy idea.' Lawler envisaged the systematic collection Birmingham's industrial, commercial and domestic waste, with depots established at derelict canal basins. He reminded the council of the resounding success of the door-to-door collection of food waste for municipal pig farms for six years during the war. 'If it could work when people were on strict food rations, it could work when people are throwing food away.' He favoured a community-run system in which people could dispose of waste of all kinds at designated collection centres. Once again, within years of his death, bottle, clothes and waste-paper banks were being placed on street corners in selected areas, the bins being regularly filled to capacity. The pollution scandal at Perry Barr where toxic waste was discharged directly into the River Tame by local industry, another abuse he raised in council, was not successfully countered until many years later.

Probably the pre-eminent figure in the civic life of the City of Birmingham in his day, Lawler is remembered for his boundless energy, enthusiasm, dominant personality, sense of humour, countless anecdotes, hysterical laugh, broken spectacles and silver clothes brush. On the minus side were his mischievous intrusions into local and regional Party organization together with his propensity to adopt on impulse, and promote the interests of, a succession of individuals, cynical chancers and adventurers and others with doubtful antecedents. His equivocal views on immigration laid him open to accusations of racism, though he had several intimates among the city's Jewish personalities. He also encouraged a community-minded West Indian GP, Dr Barnabus, to enter public life in the early 1950s. Then there was his uncontrollable coughing in public arising from his chain-smoking which led to his premature demise.

Lawler's importance in the re-establishment, from nothing, of the Party in Birmingham and beyond its boundaries in the 1950s and 60s, cannot be exaggerated. His memorial service in Birmingham Cathedral drew an enormous number of mourners, the address being delivered by the party leader, Jeremy Thorpe. It has only recently been appreciated that Lawler stood in a direct line of succession to those mid C19th enlightened industrialists, Liberal entrepreneurs, small businessmen and radical reformers such as the Chamberlains and Cadburys, whose endeavors established the city as one of the most advanced municipalities in the world. His 365-day term at Westminster when he was already in fading health was hardly enough to allow him to make a strong impression but he regularly challenged and provoked Labour Government ministers on their housing record. He served as a member of the select Comm on race relations and Immigration. Since his death Lawler has been the subject of several unpublished doctoral theses by PhD students; d 1972; Dudley 1955, Birmingham, Perry Barr 1959, Handsworth 1964, Ladywood 1966, by-e 1969, 1970; MP 1969-70; See *Dictionary of Liberal Biography

YATES, Arthur (or R)? b Manchester 1919? former British Railways employee he addressed open air political meetings as teenager before service in WWII. In an article in Lib Dem News in 2005, he stated he was selected to oppose Winston Churchill in the General Election at Woodford (Greater London) 1945 but was unable to return from active war service overseas in time to sign the nomination papers. This claim, repeated at length in his semi- autobiographical The Trooper pub 2001, is not widely accepted. Contemporary sources confirm that the Liberal and Labour Leaders had previously agreed not to oppose the candidature of the revered war time Prime Minister in his own constituency. Yates's other publications incl Red Tide Stemmed. He does however have a strong title to being one of the oldest surviving Liberal candidates, by date of his first contest, though not by age. His speech (according to Bob Fowler qv who was present), after the count at the election at Rowley Regis in 1950, comprised just five words, 'I have made my point!' presumably a reference to the tally of 4,692 of votes he had received; probably a Martell

Plan cand. He subsequently took Canadian citizenship and unsuccessfully fought provincial elections in Alberta. He further maintained he was a close friend of former Canadian Premier Pierre Trudeau who, he claimed, offered him a seat in the Senate which, he still further insists, he turned down. Rowley Regis & Tipton 1950.
